Railway Union Excursion.

The first annual excursion of the Protective Street Railway Union and many of the friends of the members took place today to River View, and the steamer Samuel J. Pents was used for the occasion. So many tickets were sold before the Pents left her wharf.

The object of the excursion was to increase the sum in the treasury, which is devoted to help sick members.

No effort was spared by the committee of arrangements to provide abundance of food for all who participated. The principal feature of the program was a game of base ball between a nine from the Jolly Fat Men's Club and a nine from the Protective Street Railway Union.

The game was played on the grounds of the Protective Street Railway Union, and the former won.

The program also comprised target shooting, bowling, boat racing, foot racing, etc.

The excursion was a great success, and the sum for the treasury was increased by $100.

The Most Popular Lady.

A contest, open to all ladies employed in this city by Uncle Sam, has been in progress since a week ago. The prizes have been offered by F. H. Wilson, the F street shoe man, to the ladies in the employ of the government who are decided by votes to be the most popular. The one receiving the highest number of votes will be given a free trip to Boston by sea and the other two will enjoy trips to Niagara Falls and Cape May.

Each purchaser of 50 cents worth of goods in the store of Mr. Wilson is entitled to one vote, and from the number of votes already cast it is evident that the rivalry in the different departments is becoming quite marked. The result of the voting will be announced on Saturday, when a committee of prominent business and professional men will count the votes cast up to that date and announce the winners.

A Query.

To the Editor of The Evening Star: Although in the case of Mrs. Pinder it may have been perfectly proper that the dentist should have been called in, "all blame," would it not be well if a law existed requiring every dentist to have a written paper from the patient's physician, the presence of the physician himself before administering the remedy for the removal of teeth?

DISPENSING JUSTICE

Judge Scott's First Appearance on the Police Court Bench.

A Large Number of Prisoners in the Procession—How the Cases Were Treated.

There were sixty-three prisoners in the cells this morning, and the Black Maria had to make several trips between the police stations and the court. Soon after the arrival of the prisoners they were given coffee and sandwiches, which strengthened them after a sleepless night in the station, but while waiting to be tried they were put through the "sweating process" in the cells, and many of the victims had to sit on the wet floor, in order to keep from suffocating. Justice Scott held the district end of the court today, and the prisoners were crowded into the cells, while the prisoners used their hats as fans and wiped of the perspiration with their coat sleeves.

Judge Scott's First Appearance.

Justice Scott's first attempt at dispensing justice, and court had been in session only a few minutes when it was evident that he was going to temper justice with mercy in a way that so many of the trifling cases deserved. Soon after court opened it developed that a few of the blue coats had done their best Saturday night and yesterday to make records for themselves, and some of their victims had been there with a clear conscience. One of the prisoners who did not receive much encouragement, and some of them are now sitting on the sidewalk or curbstone that deserves punishment. The mere fact that a prisoner is in the cells is a disgrace, and not bring him within the category of law, unless he has committed some offense, and Judge Scott will not so hold.

A sample case of occupying the sidewalk or curbstone was presented when a colored man named "John" was tried.

"If I go against the law," said John, "then I'm guilty."

A policeman appeared on the witness stand and told out there all night, and in defense for which he had arrested Thomas.

"He was on the sidewalk," he said, "and was liable to fall."

"Well, John," said the kind-hearted dispenser of justice, "you may go this time, and when you sit on the curbstone I would advise you to keep a good eye on it."

Had No Lamp on His Wheel.

Robert Scott, a little colored boy who rides a bicycle, was in the procession after having been through the "sweating process," and the charge against him was riding his wheel without a lighted lamp attached thereto.

"I'm guilty," answered the little boy, as drops of perspiration streamed down his cheeks and gave him the appearance of a shining ball.

"Didn't you know it was against the law?" the court inquired.

"Yes, sir."

"Then why did you violate the law?"

"Well, judge," the boy said, "I works for Pecosmen Koppes, and I had to work late. I couldn't get out there all night, and so I rode home."

"But why didn't you have a light on your wheel?"

"I ain't got no lamp; that's the reason."

"Five dollars," and the little boy went back to go to the work house.

Moses Berry, a little colored citizen who was never known to harm anybody, was in the procession because he had been drinking and told out there all night, and in defense for which he had arrested Thomas.

"Are you guilty?" he was asked.

"Not that I know of," was his answer.

"I said or did anything wrong I don't know it."

"What was the trouble, Moses?" Judge Scott asked.

"No trouble, judge," he answered, "if you 'scuse a couple of drinks."

"How many drinks had you taken?"

"Only two or three."

"Does any one in court know you?"

"Yes, sir."

"I know him," volunteered Lawyer Martin, "Moses Berry, a little colored citizen who was never known to harm anybody, was in the procession because he had been drinking and told out there all night, and in defense for which he had arrested Thomas."

"And I know he has always been a good, peaceable man."

"And it has been several years since I was arrested," the boy added, "if you let me go I will be several more."

"Take his personal bonds," said the judge, and Moses was once more a happy man.

Fined for Fast Driving.

Thomas McIntire appeared next on charges of fast driving and disorderly conduct. He wore no vest nor coat, and his dress was in such a condition that made him look as if he had figured in a fight. Bladenburg road was the scene of his trouble yesterday. "And," said Officer Stearns, "after I got him in the wagon he was abusive."

"Where was he?" asked the judge.

"I was only protecting my horse and wagon from intruders."

"Where was he?" asked the judge.

"I was only protecting my horse and wagon from intruders."

"I'm guilty," answered a colored girl named Mary Sherman, "but I would like to go home."

"I'll do the excusing if there's any to be done," said the court. "What do you want to say?"

"Well, judge," answered Mary, "if you let me off I'll be very thankful."

"Why should I let you off?"

"Because I was sick and I was in a place that was frequented by tramps all over winter."

"This is the youngest crowd of tramps I've ever seen in court," remarked Mr. Pugh, "but I see no reason why the District Judge should let them off."

"Neither do I," said the judge, and the alleged tramps were released to leave the District.

A Party of Tramps.

A second party of tramps from the same place appeared. These prisoners were full grown men, and some of them were sent down, while others were released.

"I very seldom drinks in dat part of de town," said an old colored man, who answered the name James Watkins.

"I suppose you were sick and I medicine went to your head?" queried Mr. Pugh.

"I didn't say dat."

"You're a young man," said the judge.

"Course I is," the old man answered; "how's a man gwine ter live if he don't work?"

Judge Scott released the old man and then disposed of the other members of the procession as they appeared.

EXCURSIONS.

An immense crowd of people assembled yesterday at River View to see the daring lower diver, Speedy, make his jump from a platform eighty feet in the air to a tank containing three and one-half feet of water. The bats were all crowded during the day and the grounds were tested to their utmost capacity. It seems as though Speedy could dive off the monument, so easy is his leap from the tower, which is situated on a rocky point of land, and the water into which he jumps. Thousands held their breath while he was in the air, and many hundreds of throats gave cheers when his head appeared above the water. The beautiful place was thronged all day long with the anxious seekers, not after knowledge, but after breezes. They found them at the Hall in abundance, and spent the day in the Hall in abundance, and the grounds were tested to their utmost capacity. The beautiful place was thronged all day long with the anxious seekers, not after knowledge, but after breezes. They found them at the Hall in abundance, and spent the day in the Hall in abundance, and the grounds were tested to their utmost capacity. It seems as though Speedy could dive off the monument, so easy is his leap from the tower, which is situated on a rocky point of land, and the water into which he jumps. Thousands held their breath while he was in the air, and many hundreds of throats gave cheers when his head appeared above the water.
